

Proposed train station does not please commuters

By Fiona & Jenna

The MBTA is proposing an improvement plan to build a big building, which they claim will be more convenient, at the south Acton train station near the bridge on Main St.

“This new building will completely block out Exchange Hall. I don’t like the MBTA’s plan, and I don’t like that they didn’t talk to the neighbors and the commuters before they made them.” says Margaret Miley, local protester. She and the neighbors who also oppose the plan came up with an alternative.

“In our design, people can come over from the south side of the station.” When they suggested their design to the MBTA, the MBTA promised to consider their alternative.

Awhile later however, the MBTA rejected their plan and decided they were going to follow through with their own big plans. Overall, the MBTA’s proposed plans are not suiting many people’s needs and are ruining the view of Exchange Hall. The MBTA’s building has still not been erected and neighbors still hold hope for their own design.
