

I base my fashion taste on what doesn't itch.

Gilda Radner

Grey Matters

Volume 3

October 17 – 21, 2005

Number 8

While the weather forecast suggests we are finally going to get a chance to dry out, we are not likely to warm up for a long, long time. Although our children are pretty good at dressing to stay dry, they appear to be less clever when it comes to dressing warmly. You'd be amazed at the number of students who come to school wearing t-shirts and sandals in December. Parents and guardians, please encourage your children to dress for the weather. We have a long winter ahead of us and the temperature of the building is likely to be on the cool side.

Unlike a typical Monday morning, this week I will be in Concord, New Hampshire participating in a New England Association of Schools and Colleges (NEASC) accreditation evaluation. NEASC "is the nation's oldest regional accrediting association whose mission is the establishment and maintenance of high standards for all levels of education, from pre-K to the doctoral level." (<http://www.neasc.org/neasc/aboutneasc.htm>) It is always good to occasionally take occasionally step back from one's daily life and gain a new perspective on what other schools are doing, learn about their innovative programs, and find ways to incorporate their successes into our school. I am thrilled with this opportunity and look forward to sharing with you what I have learned.

Thursday, October 19th is make-up picture day.

Have a great, and hopefully dry, week!